Mr. Robinson had to travel somewhere on business, and as he was in a hurry, he decided to go by air. He liked to sit beside a window when he was flying, so when he got onto the plane, he looked for a window seat. He found that all of them had already been taken except one. There was a soldier sitting in the seat beside this one, and Mr. Robinson was happy that the soldier had not taken the one by the window; but, anyhow, he at once went towards it. When he reached it, however, he saw that there was a notice on it. It was written in ink and said, 'This seat is reserved for proper load balance. Thank you.' Mr. Robinson had never seen such a notice in a plane before, but he thought that the plane must be carrying something particularly heavy in its baggage room which made it necessary to have the passengers properly balanced, so he walked on and found another empty seat, not beside a window, to sit in. When the plane was nearly full, a very beautiful girl stepped onto the plane. The soldier, who was watching the passengers coming in, quickly took the notice off the seat beside him and by this way he succeeded in having the company of the girl during the whole of the trip.
